

WPA Foundation

The Wyoming Press Association Foundation (WPAF) is dedicated to supporting and ensuring the highest degree of professionalism among journalists through journalism education. The foundation also promotes the education of the public regarding its right to how and the role the free press plays in a society.

The WPAF sponsors the Wyoming Press Association's Annual Pacemaker Contest awards display at its convention, showcasing the highest quality of work within the newspaper industry in Wyoming. Additionally, the foundation gives an award to the newspapers winning the most Pacemaker awards across all categories, including photography.

This year the University of Wyoming community journalism students' trip to the 123rd Annual WPA Convention was made possible with funding from the Foundation, and they gave $1,000 each to three newspapers for student interns.

Additionally, the Foundation has funded educational keynote speakers to attend the Annual Wyoming Press Association Conventions and UW Student Fellows to the National Newspaper Association congressional convention in Washington DC.
